
howstuffworks?

Would you pay $64,950 for a bed?

by Jessika Toothman

More Really Expensive Mattresses

For people looking to shell out more than a couple of grand on a bed, different companies offer a range of models along a sliding scale of prices. Magniflex of Italy is one available luxury brand; Hollandia of Israel is another.

Photo Courtesy of Hollandia International

The ELITE SAFE-T bed by Hollandia International not only delivers a great night's sleep, it can also spare you from ever getting popcorn butter and candy wrappers stuck on the bottom of your shoes at the movies again.

Although Hollandia's wares are a little bit cheaper than those of its competitors, it's not exactly slouching off either. For $35,000 you can purchase their Elite king-size bed, part of their Platinum-Luxe Advanced Sleep Systems Series [source: Ponto]. Don't think you're getting just a really fancy mattress in this deal though. You'll also be taking home a retractable HDTV flat screen TV and a surround sound home theatre system -- complete with a DVD/CD changer and an iPod docking station. And for a small additional fee -- if you had any money left over after buying this extravagant entertainment-enabled bed -- you can stash that spare cash right inside a safe installed beneath the mattress