New Bed For Risque Games & Getting Your Rocks Off

By David Richards | Friday | 11/02/2011

Hollandia International want Australians to go to bed and rock as well as play a few risqué games.

The US Company has released a new bed that has four speakers a built in 250-watt amplifier and docking stations for an iPad and iPod, and if that is not enough, you can get a built in TV, a controller to open and close blinds, or a projection screen that descends from a canopy, that the controller activates. There is also a built-in video projector and reading lights.

For gamers there is an Xbox gaming console that can be connected to the projector for that big gaming experience or movies.

On the relaxation side, which is what beds are really for, there is a built in massager adjustable of course and a built in chiller for wine champagne and beer.

For those who want to place an order now you do have a choice of fabrics and colours. They are also looking for a distributor in Australia.

The iCon Bed, from Hollandia International who can be contacted at www.hollandiainternational.com, can also be configured to suite.
